Course description and objectives
There are a lot of “critical” territories to be found within Communication Studies, and this seminar doesn’t pretend to cover all of them. We will focus on the intellectual and political projects that travel under the banner of “cultural studies”: i.e., one of the most important forms that critical communication studies takes these days.

From the beginning (regardless of where one believes that to have been), the range of work done in the name of cultural studies has been too diverse to allow for simple definitions of the project. Cultural studies isn’t completely unbounded, but it also doesn’t have a clearly identifiable center: there is no single object of study, no body of theory, and no methodological paradigm that lies at its core. Cultural studies’ inherent open-endedness places sharp limits on what we’ll be able to accomplish in less than four months. We won’t be able to examine cultural studies’ tangled and fractious history in its entirety, but we will trace out enough of that backstory to help make sense of the project’s current shape and circumstances. We won’t be able to cover all of the subjects that matter to cultural studies today, but we will spend several weeks surveying some of the most significant. And we won’t be able to map out cultural studies’ current trajectories with absolute precision, but we will engage the question of where the project might -- and should -- head in the future. The best way to think of this course, then, is not so much as a source of definitive answers, but as an opportunity to wrestle with productive and important questions.

Readings
The following required books are available at the University Bookstore in Coffman Union.
• Stuart Hall, Cultural Studies 1983
• Edward Said, Representations of the Intellectual
Other required readings will be made available via the course Moodle site.

Moodle
If you’re on the course roster, you should already have access to the course’s Moodle site. Point your web browser to the U’s main Moodle page (https://ay16.moodle.umn.edu/), log in, and select the “COMM8211_001S17” link from the “My Courses” menu in the “Navigation” box. We will use Moodle for several things this semester:
• a course blog where you can contribute (required) discussion questions about the course material
• access to our required non-book readings
• occasional business-related announcements about the course
• a forum for mutual support and feedback with respect to your final paper
More information on Moodle can be found at http://it.umn.edu/course-management-system-moodle-related/students

Grading policy
Presumably, you’re enrolled in this course because you genuinely want to learn about cultural studies, rather than because you need to fulfill distributional requirements or pad out your schedule with “empty” credit hours. As such, I’m assuming that grades are not a primary incentive for you. If anything, grades may be counterproductive, since they encourage you to focus on numbers (e.g., how do I turn an 89 into a 90?), rather than on the substantive issues at the core of the course. With this in mind, you should assume that successfully completing the requirements for this course will earn you an A as a final grade. That said, in cases where people are clearly slacking off, I reserve the right to go deeper into the alphabet when I submit final grades.
Attendance/participation

Our weekly meetings will be oriented around seminar-style discussions, rather than formal lectures. As such, your primary responsibility each week will be to show up prepared to contribute productively to our conversations about the assigned readings. I do not expect you to demonstrate perfect and immediate mastery of the issues raised by our readings -- questions and requests for clarification are perfectly welcome contributions -- but I will expect you to be an active and regular participant in our ongoing dialogue. I'll chime in often enough (and at enough length) that you'll certainly get my take on our readings, but this course is not designed to be a spectator event.

Discussion questions

We have 14 weeks of scheduled reading this semester (24 Jan-2 May). For at least 10 of those weeks, you should post 2-3 discussion questions related to those readings to the course blog by 2:30 pm the day before the relevant class meeting. Exactly what those questions should look like will vary from topic to topic (and from student to student), but you should aim for questions that serve as productive jumping-off points for our in-class discussions.

The course blog is accessible via the “Course blog” link on the main page of the course Moodle site. From there, you can start a new thread by clicking on the “Add a new topic” button. You can comment on an existing thread by clicking on the “Discuss this topic” link at the bottom right corner of that thread’s box.

Research paper

Your major project for the semester is a 6250-7500 word research paper. Topics can (and will) vary, but your overall project should demonstrate a clear and significant relationship to cultural studies. Ideally, the finished product should be suitable -- at least in terms of its subject matter -- for submission to a conference or a refereed journal. Major deadlines for this project are as follows:

- 14 Feb: Preliminary 1-on-1 meeting
- 21 Feb: 250-500 word proposal
- 6 May: Full-length draft
- 13 May (10:30a-12:30p): In-class group workshopping

Proposals and final drafts should be posted to the appropriate forums on the course blog.

Miscellaneous

- You may make audio and/or video recordings of class meetings for your personal use, provided you can do so without disrupting the ordinary flow of the class. The purchase and/or sale of either written notes or recordings of class meetings is strictly prohibited.
- I will make every reasonable effort to accommodate students’ needs relating to religious holidays and/or documented disabilities. By University policy, you must provide written notice (for religious holidays) and/or official documentation (for disabilities) with enough lead time for accommodations to be arranged.
- University policy prohibits sexual harassment as defined in the December 1998 policy statement (see http://policy.umn.edu/hr/sexualharassment). Questions or concerns about sexual harassment should be directed to the Office of Equal Opportunity and Affirmative Action (274 McNamara).
- As some of you may know, I’m the founder/manager of CULTSTUD-L: a cultural studies listserv that has more than 2600 subscribers from over 40 countries around the world. You’re welcome to join the listserv, but are under no formal obligation to do so. If you’re interested, you should read the list’s FAQ (Frequently Asked Questions) first to (1) find out how to subscribe and (2) learn the basic rules of conduct for the list. The FAQ is available online here: http://www.gilrodman.com/cultstud-l/
